Susan M. Rossi-Wilcox is the editor of the Journal of the Glass Art Society and a current recipient of the Rakow Research Fellowship from the Corning Museum of Glass. She was the curatorial associate at the Botanical Museum and the administrator for the glass flowers collection before retiring from Harvard University in 2007. She was recently a guest curator at The Andy Warhol Museum for the 2008 show Recette Satire: Andy Warhol's & Suzie Frankfurt's Wild Raspberries. She serves on the board of directors for the Glass Art Society.

An easy way to appreciate the beauty of glass art if you can't afford the real thing. The quality of the photos is high, which I find to be true of all Lark publications.

This beautifully priced soft cover book is a visual joy and an intelligent look at contemporary glass masters. It's a perfect gift for the collector or the appreciator who just wants to know more.

While I enjoyed reading about some of the artists we collect and being introduced to new ones, several of the most famous were left out including Chihuly.

It was a gift to my sister-in-law and she says she loves it.

A look into the most sought after glass artists. It was interesting and informative.

Anyone with any interest in glass as an art medium should own this book. It features major works by major artists and is not overly curatorial.

Perfect gift.

Fabulous photos of contemporary art glass
